I WISH I WERE A CHICKEN

OEUFRE

OEUFRE

Today's commercial laying hens have been selectively bred for hyper-production. Reduced to mere production units, some "improved" breeds can lay over 300 eggs in a year. Oeufre aims at illustrating the absurd existence of the oppressed and exploited individual and exposing the perverse excesses of a profit-driven society on the example of the egg industry.

Determined to match the annual egg production of an industrial laying hen, I subjected myself to the repetitive and exhausting task of manually producing one cardboard egg almost every day throughout 2016. Each piece took me about three hours to craft, making it as individual and unique as a bird's egg.

On completion of the 12-month production process, I photographed my cardboard creations in different egg boxes from all over the world, giving rise to a series of 57 colour photographs entitled Les chefs d'oeufre. The special thing about these photographs is that motifs vary both in price and edition size, depending on the origin and number of eggs depicted. All in all, there are a total of 300 copies available.

In the broader sense, Oeufre scrutinises the prevailing mode of production that encourages uniformity and monoculture in order to maximize efficiency and profits. It aims to confront a culture that relentlessly pushes ever more individuals into precarious working and living conditions and, all too often, confuses quantity with quality, production with creation and price with value.
